NATIONAL PARK FOR TEXAS PANHANDLE

Also Hoped to Protect Cedar Forests from Red River

Rampages

WASHINGTON, May 27 .- Senator and congressmen from Texas, Oklaboms, Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi, the "Red River contingent," have caused Secretary of Agriculture Wilson to be mundated these days with maps, stereoscopic views gion in the psuhandle of Texas which they hope to see set apart as another untional park. A call was sent out to: all the information which commit-tess in a dozen counties could supply and it includes data on breadths, heights and measuresments, all details or the picturesque Palo Duro canyon in the counties of Handat. Armstrong and Swisher, near Amar miles wide and forty miles long, the eriginating point for the ireshets of the Red River valley.

This effort has been coming on tor many years, in fact, every time the Red friver has gone on a rampage they have been saying down in the great southwest that Uncle Sam ought to be asked to stop it. The the construction of dams and basins and conserving the diculous. freshet before it gets too far from home. Millions of acres of land have carried down stream by freshets, a waste which it is proposed to stop. Also the available reserve supplies of water would add millions of dollars to the value of land along the Red River and its tributaries, and greatly increase the navigmbility of that stream, one which is navigable a greater that tance than any other stream in the United States save three.

To Protect Cedar Forests. Great forests of red cedar in the district which will comprise the park have served to lessen the damage of the flood torrents of spring. These forests the Red River delegations in congress hope to reserve and if they do, it is said that no other national park in the country, neither the Grand Canyon nor the Yellowstone, will exceed in scenic grandeur and interest that of Palo Duro.

which in recent years has increased in population several hundred per cent, as the range was turned into farm land, committees are working like beavers to get the necessary eviidence and the necessary pressure in congress to carry through without a hitch a bill for creating the new reservation in a letter from Jasper N. Haney, chairman of one of the local committees at work in Silverton, Amarillo, Canyon City, Tulia, Hereford, Caude and Clarendon, he

There can be no reasonable doubt but what the park will be an accomplished fact soon since it can be canyon City and some other towns are within 60 minutes' drive of the anyon, the picturesquesness of which will compare with the Grand Canyon and that of the Yellowstone. Three years ago this national park was proposed and the Palo Dura Nation al Park association, which included some of the livest wires of the southwest, secured a lot of important data secured recommendations of many national bodies, including farmtions, medical conventions and others, that the Pale Duro park be set apart as a reservation and be made the reservoir of usefulness for the floods which have done so much damage through the Red River val*

If we have neither the patriotism nor the foresight to reserve such a place as a park for our children others will do so when we get out of the way. Congressman John W. Stephens is giving this matter spe-cial attention and he is assisted by colleagues, Hon. Morris Shept pard and also by practically all the national legislators of Texas, Oklaboma, Louislana and Mississippi."

Meteoric Showers.

How many know that the sorth is getting larger each year from the fall of meteoric matter on its surface and that such matter is of no suppl weight? One hundred tons a day I the estimate made by Young This be says, would make a layer one took thick over the entire earth in 1,500. 000,000 years if we assume this meteoric matter to be three times beavy as water. But another effect has to take place at the same time. As the earth is getting larger the force of gravity gets larger, and we are being attracted with more force toward the unn. But the centrifugal force keeping us away from the sun gets much greater, too, and, in fact, more so than the sun's gravity, the result being that we are gradually increasing our distance from the glowing orb.

I sat, very small, on a chair in a corner. I felt like Jezebel, or whatever her name was, and now the Haron man was coming, and he was colng to see me stripped of my pretensions to domesticity and of a husband who neglected me. He was going to see me branded a living He, the knob of the door turn. Jim brought him down in a dress ing-gown and a state of bewilderment. The counter pressure evidently alarm It was plain that the memory of the afternoon still rankled, for he was released and nothing more happene very short with Jim and inclined to resent the whole thing. The clock in the hall chimed half after three as came down the stairs, and I heard Mr. Harbison stumble over something in the darkness and say that if it was a joke, he wasn't in the humor for it. To which Jim retorted that it wasn't anything resembling a joke, and for heaven's sake not to walk on his feet: He couldn't get around the furniture any faster.

At the door of the den Mr. Harbison stopped, blinking in the light. Then, when he saw us, he tried to back himself and his dishabille out into the obscurity of the library. But Aunt Selina was to quick for him.

"Come in," she called, "I want you, young man. It seems that there are only two fools in the house, and you

He straightened at that and looked wildered, but he tried to amile. "I thought I was the only one," he "In it possible that there is an-

'Is that so?" he asked politely, trying to be interested and to understand at the same time. He had not seen me. He was garing fixedly at Bella, languishing on the divan and watching him with lowered lids, and he had given Jim a side glance of contempt. But now he saw me and he colored under his tan. His neck blushed furiously, being much whiter than his face. He kept his eyes on mine, and I knew that he was mutely ask ing forgiveness. But the thought of what was coming paralyzed me My eyes were glued to his as they had been that first evening when he had called me "Mrs. Wilson," and after an instant he looked away, and his face was set and hard.

"It seems that we have all been playing a little comedy, Mr. Harby son," Aunt Selina began, nasally sareastle. "Or, rather, you and I have been the audience. The rest have

"I-I don't think I understand," he said slowly. "I have seen very little comedy."

"It was not well planned," Aunt Se lina retorted tartly. "The idea was good, but the young person who was playing the part of Mrs. Wilson-

"Oh, come, Aunt Selina," Jim pro tested, "Kit was coaxed and cajoled into this thing. Give me fits if you like; I deserve all I get. But let Kit alone she did it for me."

Bella looked over at me and smiled

"I would stop doing things for Jim, Kit," she said. "It is so unprofitable." But Mr. Harbison barked back to Aunt Selina's speech.

"Playing the part of Mrs. Wilson! he repeated "Do you mean-?"

"Exactly. Playing the part. She li not Mrs. Wilson. It seems that that honor belonged at one time to Miss Knowles. I believe such things are not unknown in New York, only why in the name of sense does a man want to divorce a woman and then meet her at two o'clock in the morn ing to kiss the place where his own wedding ring used to rest?" Jim fidgeted. Bella was having spanms of mirth to herself, but the Harbison man did not smile. He stood for a moment looking at the fire: Then be thrust his hands deep into the pockets of his dressing-gown and stalked over to me. He did not care that the others were watching and listening. "Is it true?" he demanded staring down at me. "You are not Mrs. Wilson? You are not married at all? All that about being neglected—and loathing him, and all that on the roof-there was no foundation of truth ?"

But he deliberately left me and went over to the door. There he turned and looked down at Aunt Selina. He was a little white, but there was no passion in his face.

Thank you for telling me all this, Miss Caruthera," he said easily, "Now without material price change. that you and I know, I'm afraid the others will miss their little diversion. Good night."

Oh, it was all right for Jim to laugh and say that he was only huffed a little and would be over it by morn ing. I knew better. There was som thing queer in his face as he were out. He did not even glance in m direction. He had said very little, b he had put me as effectually in th wrong as if he had not kissed me deliberately kissed me-that very ev ning, on the roof.

CHAPTER XX.

Breaking Out in a New Place, Hunger roused everybody early the next morning, Friday. Leila Mercer had discovered a box of bonbons that Atl she had forgotten, and we divided them around. Aunt Selina asked for the candled fruit and got it-quite a third of the box. We gathered in the lower hall and on the stairs and nib bled nauseating sweets while Mr. Harbison examined the telephone

He did not glance in my direction. Betty and Dai were helping him, and he seemed very cheerful. Max sat with me on the stairs. Mr. Harbison had just unscrewed the telephone box from the wall and was squinting into it, when Bella came downstairs. It was her first appearance, but as she was always late, nobody noticed When she stopped, just above us on the stairs, however, we looked up. and she was holding to the rall and trembling perceptibly.

"Mr. Harbison, will you-can you come upstairs?" she asked. Her voice was strained, almost reedy, and her lips were white.

Mr. Harbison stared up at her, with the telephone box in his hands. "Why-er-certainly," he said, "but unless it's very important, I'd like to fix this talking machine. We want to make a food record." "I'd like to break a food record,"

Max put in, but Bella created a diversion by slitting down suddenly on the stair just above us, and burying Sup Cop her face in her handkerchief. "Jim is sick," she said, with a sob "He-he doesn't want anything to ent, and his head aches. He-said for to go away and let him die!" Dal dropped the hammer immedi ntely, and Lollie Mercer sat petrified with a bonbon half-way to her mouth For, of course, it was unexpected

"All over," Bella quavered. "His "Great Scott!" Dal said suddenly Suppose he should-Bella, are you telling us all his symptoms?"

Beila put down her handkerchie and got up. From her position on the stairs she looked down on us with something of her old haughty manner "If he is ill, you may blame your selves, all of you," she said cruelly You taunted him with being-fat and laughed at him, until he stoppe eating the things he should cut. now-he is ill. He-he has a rash." Everybody jumped at that, and we instinctively moved away from Bella. She was quite cold and scoraful by that time.

"A rash!" Max exclaimed. "What port of rash?" "I did not see it," Bella said with dignity, and turning she went up the
